Good news, Bad news

Customers are a strange lot, and I am forever amazed that so much is accomplished with so little time to think things through.

As you probably know by now, for the past eight years we have been distributing the Port Washington Calendar issues through approximately 150 high traffic local merchants, businesses and offices. This is efficient, cost effective and helps get the Calendar into the hands of locals who shop in town and visitors who come to visit our shops and eateries.

This distribution has the side effect of (hopefully) reminding those merchants that the Calendar exists, that their customers like what it contains... and, maybe, they should consider us for some of their advertising. To be fair, we rotate some of this distribution based on how fast the issues are picked up, etc.

So, about a week or so ago, I received a voice mail from a business that we had missed for a couple of months... the message was interesting. They wanted to know why they were no longer receiving 'their' copies of the Calendar. We were delighted to receive the message and made it a point to stop by to talk with them.

The person we talked with was pleasant and sincerely wanted to be put back on our distribution list. My concern was that it did not appear that they had enough traffic. The lady explained that they had more than 50 employees who all liked the Calendar and used it to see what was happening in town and looked for the advertiser coupons and specials.

Being pushy I suggested that we had been dropping off issues and sending promotional emails for some eight years and would have thought they would consider advertising with us somewhere along the line.

Nope.

The Future of the Hempstead Harbor Sand Pits A Community Meeting to Help Protect this Resource

Join the Port Washington community in a growing movement to help protect the Hempstead Harbor Sand Pits. A presentation on the environmental resources of the Hempstead Harbor Nature Sanctuary will be given by local environmental expert, David Jakim, will take place in the Port Library's Hagedorn Room on Wednesday, April 6, from 7 – 8:30 pm. The presentation will be followed by an open community meeting to network and join the effort to help protect the area.

Few very people are aware of the fact that this astonishingly large and abundant natural habitat exists on the Port Washington Peninsula. In fact, at 240 acres, this area is the largest natural habitat on the Peninsula. Formerly known as the Hempstead Harbor Sand Pits and henceforth referred to as the Hempstead Harbor Nature Sanctuary (HHNS), the area supports the greatest diversity of flora, fauna, and biological communities on the peninsula. The HHNS also contains Port Washington's largest freshwater wetland and is therefore an important part of Port's groundwater system. However, this pristine natural ecosystem is in danger because of multiple ongoing environmental harms and risks that include development, water pollution, ATV use, invasive species, and human disturbance.
